

Store Sense for Sensible People

CORRECT Storekeeping has developed into a science. The element of chance is eliminated so far as the relations of buyer and seller are concerned. The scientific plan admits of but one price for an article, and that the lowest possible under the circumstances. It makes imperative the return of money for the return of goods, and shoddy goods have no place in a store conducted on this plan. The progressive merchant knows that in the long run it pays to have a liberal policy; that profits of today are very insignificant compared to the cumulative results which come from years of honorable dealings with the public—a good reputation being worth more than gold to the merchant who hopes to hold the lead.
